

A Mid-Nineties Lull Notwithstanding, Most Americans Think Favorably of the NRA

Data coverage is spotty but favorability has held steady even in the wake of prominent mass shootings like Aurora and Newtown. Interpretations are multiple but these patterns would be consistent with partisan sorting that started in 1994 and accelerated in 2008.

